

This study proposes a practical method that utilizes infrasonic and seismic sensors located in the same site to help differentiate tectonic events and quarry blasts. The co-located sensors were installed in two locations and during different periods: Brasília National Park (PNB), Distrito Federal, and Sete Lagoas city, Minas Gerais State, Brazil.